AN ESSAY BY SILVIA CAMPORESI

My project Mirabilia started in 2017 after accomplishing Atlas Italiae (2013-2015), which was a survey of ghost towns and villages of Italy. This new and important Italian tour is aiming to search for special and marvellous natural sites, bizarre buildings and unusual museums, theatres or other hidden architectures. They all reveal forgotten cultures and vernacular stories totally detached from any touristic destinations. In my artistic research I have always been trying to concentrate on defining identities, either lost or revived. In each location I tried to highlight the essential elements of their inner spirit and most of all of the people who lived there. Mirabilia tells us a story, sometime a fairy tail, of unusual locations spread all over Italy from north to south. It is not meant to be a simple geographical recognition, but rather a survey of social and anthropological characters, architectural styles, naturalistic forms, cultural aspects of material and ephemeral elements, uses, customs and habits of the Italian people, which are so different along our territory. The final goal of Mirabilia is to realise a corpus of photographic works able to show a rare artistic documentation of Italy. A filmic exploration of 20 Italian regions able to show unreachable destinations or revive sites once disappeared or destroyed. For this particular process I reproduced in a small scale some of those lost beauties, being able to shoot them with a realistic lenticular perspective, for example the Emerging village in Tuscany or the Rose Island in the Adriatic Sea.
